Partnership resource and contribution mapping tool

This mapping tool is to help you identify the unique resources each partner can contribute to the partnership. For a potential partnership, use it to help you decide if this partnership is fit for purpose and right for what you want to achieve. For a current partnership, use it to guide your planning discussions with your chosen partner.

What can each partner bring?

What knowledge do we bring – practice, research, lived experience, areas of specialisation, areas of expertise, other?

What physical space, resources and infrastructure can we contribute?

What contacts can we contribute to the partnership – relationships of influence and credibility?

What technology can we contribute – computers, phones, ICT, systems, email accounts, other?

Who are the people we can bring to the partnership – specific staff, roles, champions, volunteers, community members, people with lived experience, other?

What information processes and systems can we bring – ways of disseminating information, protocols and processes, informal and formal ways of working, other?

What networks can we give the partnership access to – sector specific, region specific, government, political, others?

Adapted from Tennyson, R. (2011) The Partnering Toolbook: An essential guide to cross-sector partnering, The Partnering Initiative, International Business Leaders Forum (IBLF).

Health Justice Australia